Card of Thanks

Perhaps you sent a lovely card,
or sat quietly in a chair.
Perhaps you came by the house or stopped and said a prayer.
Perhaps you sent flowers or food
If so, we saw them there.
Perhaps you spoke the kindest words,
as any friend could say.
Perhaps you were not there at all,
just thought of us that day
Whatever you did to console our hearts,
We thank you so much.
Whatever the part.

INSTANT PARTY SNACKS

Want to spend more time partying and less time preparing?

Here's a way to cut corners, pare the budget, and keep your reputation as a hostess intact and shining.

They're called "instant snacks".

Next time you are preparing for a party (scheduled or unscheduled) build it around tasty combinations of flavored "dipping chips" and instant soup mixes. You can buy them now—and they'll be fresh as a daisy well into next year. You no longer have to load your refrigerator with expensive, highly-perishable goodies in order to serve your guests a wide selection of tangy snacks.

All it takes are the new variations on the familiar Melba Toast, instant soup mixes, canned tuna, sour cream, and lemon juice. With these on hand, you can whip up snacks in a jiffy, and your guests will think you have been planning the treat for days in advance!

Instant soup mixes are available everywhere and so are the Devonshire "chips" to go with them. You can choose either the crisp, familiar Melba Toast, dreamed up 80 years ago by diet-conscious opera star Nellie Melba—or bite-size Rounds, or a new variation known as Disco's, curly "chips" designed especially for scooping.

Among the three types you can choose a number of flavors—plain, rye, wheat, sesame, garlic, bacon-flavor, or onion.

In this way, you can parlay the flavor of one dip into eight interesting and distinct taste combinations.

The classic instant dip is the "California" recipe, which requires only:

2 cups (16 oz.) sour cream
1 envelope Lipton Onion Soup Mix

All you do is blend the two in a small bowl, and be sure it's chilled when you serve it with a selection of melba toast, rounds, and Disco's.

A variation on this recipe, also quickly mixed, is Tuna Dip. It requires:

2 cups (16 oz.) sour cream
1 envelope Onion-Mushroom or Beefy Onion Soup Mix
1 7-oz. can tuna, drained and flaked
2 teaspoons lemon juice

In a medium bowl, blend soup mix, sour cream, tuna, and lemon juice. Serve chilled with a selection of melba toast, rounds, or Disco's in assorted flavors.

"Truth is wherever you decide to face it." John Berry

AGE 50+

Americas' Senior Assets

Workers over 50, even over 70, are absent from work less often, have fewer accidents, show better judgment, and are generally superior to younger workers both in the quality and quantity of their output, according to the Report of the Third Congress of the International Association of Gerontology.

SENIOR AMERICANS: An enterprising, lively group.

The company most dedicated to serving the insurance needs of America's mature adults, is the Colonial Penn Insurance Company. At a time when many companies considered older Americans poor risks, Colonial Penn stepped in to meet their needs. The Company offers—through the mail—automobile insurance with a lifetime renewal guarantee feature to people 50 years of age and older.

When Pets May Do More Good Than Pills

by Cy Brickfield

Ever since they were first married nearly fifty years ago, my friends have always had a dog in their family. As soon as one passed on, another would take its place, so their life seemed to be filled with an unending chain of canines. Then, a few months ago, when they decided to move into a congregate housing facility, the chain was broken.

Since they had known well in advance that the congregate residence did not allow its tenants to keep pets in their apartments, they naturally considered this factor when making their decision. Although they regretted the sacrifice, they eventually concluded that they had no choice but to give up their dog, leaving still another void in their lives.

Their situation is not unusual, but one that is shared by millions of older Americans living in senior citizen apartment buildings across the country. Whether operated by private non-profit organizations or local government housing authorities, these facilities simply do not allow pets—with perhaps the possible exception of goldfish, and occasionally caged birds. The motivation behind such rules is not to deprive older people of the pleasures of a pet, but to simplify building maintenance.

At the same time, the people who run these buildings profess to be concerned about the welfare and overall well-being of their elderly tenants. Consequently, they might be interested in what a University of Pennsylvania researcher has discovered about the effect pets can have upon people with heart disease.

For a year, Dr. Erika Friedmann and her colleagues followed the progress of 92 people who had been treated at the University of Maryland Hospital in Baltimore for heart attacks or other coronary disorders. By year's end, eleven of the 39 people, who did not have pets, had died. During that same period, only three of the 53 pet owners died.

This is what researchers call a "statistically significant" connection, and it applies to dogs, cats, birds and even iguanas. Dr. Friedmann doesn't yet know why this is so, but she is convinced that having a pet "seems to be a type of outside contact for the patient, an interest other than himself or herself. We think pets should be looked at as possible therapeutic tools for discharged patients."

Dr. Friedmann is not proposing that pets are the ultimate cure for heart disease, but — since there are frequently emotional roots to heart cardiovascular problems — she theorizes that pet ownership could constitute "an important source of companionship with positive health effects."

To nurse Margaret Noctor, a member of the study's research team, the presence of pets means that "the patients now have someone else to live for—and that may play a role. The pet cannot survive without its owner, so they feel needed." Gerontologists have long known that one of the most important things that older people need is to be needed—a consideration that is, of course, important at any age.

When a California housing developer commissioned a survey recently to learn which amenities older people want most in their homes, the right to keep pets in apartments was near the top of the list.

"I'd rather live in a tent than give up my pet," commented one respondent. "My cat is the only warm thing that has touched me in years." (This latter remark is a poignant indication of the importance pets can assume during a person's later years.)

The rationale offered by most housing managers for prohibiting pets is not an outrageously unreasonable one; they fear—with perhaps some justification —that, at some point, the older pet owner will become incapable of caring for his or her animal, and thus create a nuisance for other residents.

Wouldn't it be more humane, however, to deal with such problems—if and when they occur—on an individual basis instead of denying even the most responsible residents the pleasure of a pet through the supposedly preventive prohibitions which presently prevail?

Much has been said — quite frequently by people in the housing management field—about the essential loneliness of the elderly. At a time when the lives of most old people are filled with more losses than gains, it would take only a simple change in the rules to at least ameliorate some of the painful anxiety of being alone.

"Pets are a form of social contact," notes Dr. Friedmann. "People tend to personify their pets, to talk to them and ask them questions. The pet is not just an animal to them; it has some definite place in the family."
